How to read this forecast

Tradition watches two things through the year: your running dasha, and the slow planets (Jupiter, Saturn and Rahu) counted from your natal Moon. Faster planets are left out, because they change too quickly to plan around.

Each month is marked by a simple rule. Jupiter is traditionally favourable in houses 2, 5, 7, 9 and 11 from the Moon, and Saturn and Rahu in houses 3, 6 and 11. Two or more favourable marks a month "traditionally favourable", none marks it "a time for care", and the rest are "mixed".

This is what tradition associates with these placements. It is not a prediction, and a month marked for care is simply a month tradition would plan carefully.

The dashas running this year

Jupiter

The Jupiter dasha lasts sixteen years and is traditionally read as an expansive, favourable period. It may bring growth in learning, teaching, advisory work, finances and spiritual interest, along with supportive mentors. Tradition notes that results depend on Jupiter's placement and on personal effort. Its customary advice is to stay generous, keep learning, and respect teachers and elders.

Moon

The Moon dasha lasts ten years and is traditionally read as a period in which emotions, home life, family and public dealings come to the foreground. It may bring a stronger focus on belonging, comfort and nurturing, as well as changes of residence or routine. Tradition suggests it works best when the mind is kept calm through regular habits, prayer, and time with loved ones.

Mars

The Mars dasha lasts seven years and is traditionally read as an active, energetic period. It may favour starting projects, property matters, competitive pursuits and standing up for oneself. Tradition also cautions that haste and quarrels are more likely, so patience in speech and careful decisions are advised. Physical exercise and disciplined work are the customary ways to direct this energy constructively.

Sade Sati runs during this forecast, in its rising phase when the year opens.

The rising phase begins when Saturn enters the sign before the natal Moon, lasting about two and a half years. Tradition associates it with a gradual shift in priorities, sometimes with extra responsibilities at work or home and a need for budgeting and planning. It is read as an early call to organise and simplify. Many families treat it as a time for steady discipline, patience, and regular devotional habits. It is a phase to prepare for, not to dread. Starting good habits now is the usual advice.

No Dhaiya runs during this forecast.

How we calculate

Lahiri ayanamsha, mean node for Rahu, Vimshottari dasha from your birth star, and transits counted by whole sign from your natal Moon in Taurus. Each month shows the position on its first day. Dates are in UTC, so a change can fall a day either side in your local time.
